

Removing the rules against consolidation is not good - particularly in the media industry. Left unchecked, consolidation [in any industry] inevitably leads to anti-capitalist / socialist environments. One of the purposes of governmental organizations such as the SCC and FCC, is to provide the checks and balances that curtail runoff consolidation. Removing rules is not your job - imposing rules is.

If you want to live in a homogeneous society that limits innovation, squashes entrepreneurship, and oppresses basic freedoms, please move to Europe, China, or any number of other countries. Tickets are cheap, and the dollar is still relatively strong in most regions. Please visit Priceline.com , Travelocity.com, or Expedia.com for your one-way tickets. Have a great trip.
